A strong connection to Country

Originally home to the Ngarrindjeri and Ramindjeri people, they called the region 'Wirramulla'. For thousands of years, they hunted and gathered in the region's fertile lands, which supported vast animal populations. Meanwhile, the tranquil turquoise waters were brimming with life. Today, First Nations are still feeling Victor Harbor's call by sharing their culture with locals and visitors through dream-time stories, local tours, shared Indigenous and English placenames, and an abundance of street art and murals scattered throughout the township.
